

The paper focuses on the essay "My Stumbling Speech in Kyiv" by Friedrich Dürrenmatt which hitherto has been on the sidelines of Dürrenmatt studies. The literary portrait of a well-known Ukrainian poet Taras Shevchenko as a cultural "Other" and the self-projection of the essay's author have been analyzed here in their interrelations with various cultural and political contexts.